To tell what it did not do would require more space. A majority was sent to Columbia to do what Tillman wanted them to do. At the legislative session of 1890 the "reform" legislators were quite subservient to the wishes of their chief, for he was popular then; but they were mostly raw recruits and inexperienced in public affairs. They tried to do something, but left most of the important work of the session incomplete, and it came over to the session of 1891 for final

Between the sessions of 1890 and 1891 there was a decided change in popular feeling. Governor Tillman, for some reason, had lost much of his popularity when the second session of the "ref. rm" Legislature opened. Herce it is that many of his pet measures were entirely ignored We are not now sp cu-

It is interesting, if not significant, to recall the recommendations contained in the Governor's Inaugural in 1890 and his Message in 1891, and see how many of these recommendations were "sat upou" by the Legislature-most of them at the second term

10. The enactment of a new railroad law "similar to that of Georgia" A new law was passed at the sess n of 1890, but the Governor was not alt ceth er pleased with it and therefore v-toed it. At the session of 1891 a bill for this purpose passed the House, but was killed in the closing hours of the Senate for want of quorum. So this recommendation also failed.

11. In his Inaugural the Governor made the remarkable declaration that "self government by counties is and has always been a failure." In accordance with his recommendations, three of his ardent suppporters-Mr. W. D. Evans of the Senate, and Messrs John Gary Evans and J. L. Yet no Governor of South Carolina since 1876 ever had so large a proportion of his recommendations ignored or defeated as Governor Tillman had. One reason for this has already been states, viz, the Governor's loss of popularity in the summer of 1891. Another was that members who were acxious enough o be regarded as personal followers of Titiman in order to "make their calling and election sure," got to feeling their own importance after getting in and wanted to show the people that they did not belong to Tillman -especially after Tillman had lost bis great popularity. Another reason is that at the last
